Campaign Clicker stopped responding. yes\uff0cit\u2018s cheap. kind of() challenging, I mean it drives me crazy but N.O.T. worths. a game worse than any browser game or mobile game you have ever played.

nothing makes any sense here. a tank shooting other tanks, buggies, spiders, bats, choppers, huge flying skulls, undead bone monsters, dinosaur-mechs and the obligatory aliens. also changing weapons takes long enough to make you fall asleep. i like myself a good trash game now and then but this is just absurdly terrible.

also after torturing myself for one hour on normal difficulty i was killed by one of the bosses and after respawning i couldn't move or shoot.

restarting the game didn't solve the problem so i had to start all over again and finished the game on easy in 20 minutes!

worthless piece of sh#t.. A vertical shmup by ASTRO PORT,just like every other game from that doujin developer this title oozes style and quality from every pore.. No satisfaction.

Pros

- Zombie short game
- local same computer player VS player / computer
- play with bonuses or without

Cons

- no cutscene voice and low quality
- no resolution options
- no mouse sensitivity options
- sounds and music gets annoying quick
- bugged achievements, i can't even get the 280 points one, the AI is constantly blocking me from making it, also the perfect all strike is impossible without file mods that i'm not doing, that is not normal, tried hundreds of times, awful design.

4/10 rating.

. "Welcome to the Hidden Object Game Show" says the ever so glib, top hat and tuxedo wearing Master of Ceremony with the Clockwork Orange eyes and a maniacal laugh that puts the Joker to shame. Okay, gramps what have you managed to get yourself into besides a cage along with 5 other caged 'contestants'. For accuracy's sake two people are in one cage, making 5 cages total. Despite this bizarre and slightly unnerving introduction the only thing any of this has to do with gameplay is releasing the trapped and caged 'contestants'. (Making this game 5 levels in total.)

I read all the reviews after I played the game and the negative ones did nothing to dampened my enthusiasm about recommending this game. This is what a TRUE HIDDEN OBJECT GAME IS. No bells, whistles, or storyline beyond the premise. No walkabout adventure/mystery. No point and click, puzzles, achievements, or anything else that is associated with today's HO games. This is a game for a connoisseur and an aficionado of the Hidden Object genre.

Circa 2010 and the third of a series, this game is only about finding Hidden Objects. The only thing repetitive about this game is probably the music. So turn it off. This game uses a spin wheel to choose the type of hidden object play the gamer gets. It is randomized and there is an auto-spin option. There are 13 different types of hidden object find "puzzles": straight list, combine (which is equivalent to "extra step" finds), letter getter (find the alphabet which fill in the letters of find clues - almost like hangman), silhouette, focus (day version of night mode played with a fuzzy picture and a magnifying glass), riddle (i.e. orange and rabbits favorite food), elimination (eliminate several series of items from the scene before a riddle to the object needed to be found is given), triplets (find three of the same object), find 10 (find 10 of something), spot the difference, puzzle (match the puzzle piece to the puzzle piece in the scene) and countdown (30 seconds to find the object). Just the variety of different types of Hidden Object "puzzles" is staggering compared to today's games. Now add to this about 30 different scenes and the game is a very far cry from repetitive some claim this game is.

I never played the same thing twice, and not until near end did I even get the same scene (and then with a different puzzle type). A mention about the scenes, the objects in the scene are what one would expect to find in say a garage, a swimming pool or a bedroom. Albeit a very full garage, cluttered swimming pool, or extremely messy bedroom but overall the items are appropriate to the scene not just random junk.

The object of the game is to release the 6 trapped and caged 'contestants', who they themselves are a bit over the top. Their banter is pretty amusing, as well as their stereotype. There are six total game rounds that must be played to release each contestant. (In one case, 2.) However, each game can be extended with bonus rounds (up to 3). (I think this is random, or NOT getting bonus rounds may depend on whether or not the gamer lands the stop in a small gold area on the spinner.) Despite playing a bonus round on the same scene the puzzle type is different, and the objects move or are added depending of the puzzle type. During gameplay "bonus" scenes show up that the gamer can click on. (I only ever got two per puzzle.) These bonus scenes last 15 seconds during which time the gamer must collect as many broken token pieces as they can. These tokens give the gamer hints, 2x hints, skip (a puzzle type when placed on the spin wheel), and/or an unlock (unlock a new puzzle type) depending on how many pieces the gamer collects. After each game round a scoreboard is given showing accuracy, tokens, etc. (Accuracy may depend on misclicks, less misclicks the higher the accuracy??)

That is the game.

After everyone is free, the Master of Ceremony states the "gamer" cannot leave because there is more to do. The "more to do" is found in the extended play area on the main menu. In this extended play area, scenes are shown with stars beneath indicating which type of puzzle that has or has not been played.

One warning: Some the scenes have windows which are so bright the objects in them can not be seen. I thought this was probably my computer but apparently not. Others have mentioned/complained about this. I am quite sure if this game was ever remastered that this would no longer be a problem. My solution was to use hints or simply randomly click on the window to "see" if anything was there. Compared to some of the bugs I have encountered in newer games this was barely a shrug on the annoyance scale.

So yes, get this game, and though I received this as a gift, full price is well worth it.. Game completely sucks.. It was kinda cute and I enjoyed some of it at the very start of it but a lot of it is in poor taste. So no... I Do Not recommend it. I was hoping for more..... love for the Earth, life, and the animals, which was really not even close to being there. It seemed to be more making a joke of it and us as a whole.... sadly. If it did the above better then I would have had less problems with it. Even the 'Tower of Babel' was in it.... again that to me is in poor taste. ( the tower of babel, I got that as a trading card! ) You can be the judge for yourself. As for me I do not care for it.

The chapters just go on for far too long, and it always seems like the dialogue is repeating itself.

There is no need for a co-host, who just gives common sense answers.

The game is not funny - as least like the first chapters of the first game, it's just trying to be funny and getting people to talk about it.

Sadly a disappointment, maybe three times the charm.. Cute game. I enjoy it.. Interesting strategic game, enough content for the price.

Agreeable for short playing sessions, with different difficulties suitable for harsher games.. Definitely worth a look if your computer can run it, and if it does everything it promises to do, it could end up being one of the best RPGs on Steam.. This game drops you into the life of a sperm. The unrelenting hunt for the egg..The immeasurable death...Brothers...Sisters...No more. Highlander meets the evasive ♥♥♥♥♥♥. There can be only one!

Have a seat and ♥♥♥♥♥♥ enjoy the relentless battle for life. Also, sperm photon torpedos...that's a thing now.. 22 minutes for 5000 achievement <3

lovely game for achievement hunter
