What's New In Nammo FreeMotion?

Web 2.0 technology allows web sites to integrate flash more effectively and easily with the Web. Web 2.0 browsers such as Internet Explorer, Safari and Firefox are rapidly becoming the leading users of flash on the Web. Flash is a platform that allows for an explosion of creativity in the animation, multimedia and simulation fields, as developers can embed interactive code directly into their pages using ActionScripts (which are similar to Visual Basic). Flash is used to create interactive titles, animations, charts, data visualisation, plays, games, window effects and much more. The technology is also increasingly being embedded into other forms of Internet technology, such as RSS and XML feeds, and is already being used in enterprise-wide applications (e.g., maps and 3-D computer games). Another aspect of Flash is its ability to play swf files and open swf files. This feature, more commonly known as SWF (Shockwave Flash) Player, is a common video and audio player that supports many of the most popular file formats. Despite the fact that SWF Player is just a video player, it supports many of the files and formats that are regularly used to create sound and visual effects, such as FLV, WAV, MP3, MOV, MP4 and WMV.
